Lt. Governor Garlin Gilchrist II has emphasized that every Michigander deserves access to affordable, fast internet and has supported efforts to identify unserved and underserved broadband locations statewide. He will speak about why connectivity matters for education, healthcare, small business growth, civic participation, and everyday life.

- High-speed internet helps families access online learning, telehealth, public services, and job opportunities.
- Rural and underserved communities continue to need stronger broadband infrastructure and affordable service options.
- Highline Internet has highlighted fiber expansion efforts in Michigan, including plans to serve thousands of homes through a new fiber network.
- Community input helps shape where connectivity investments are needed most.
